St Brigid

Brigid, Patrick and Columba were key pillars in the young Irish church. Brigid was about 10 when St Patrick died and, if historical dates are correct, then Columba was about 4 when Brigid died, apparently in 525. In about a century, the faith of Patrick has taken hold in so many parts of this island

Today we face a need for huge renewal of Church in our own sad world. What seems to have been key elements in this Irish form of Christianity that became a powerhouse of monasteries and missionaries over the following centuries?

St Brigid and her friends had no idea how their ministry would work out. But they knew that they were not alone, God was with them.

The gifts of God

On the mountain Jesus speaks on behalf of God. He sat, for this was the ancient posture of teachers, a sign of their authority and dignity. God wants all of us to grow and become people of the beatitudes. As we journey through life he is forming us in the image of Jesus, so that we might live by his wisdom.

Jesus draws us to become poor as he was poor. His poverty meant that he did not seek more possessions, more power, more control of the future, more limelight. For him poverty was the freedom to be content and rejoice in what he had received as well as the freedom to share what he had without holding anything back.

Poverty is a way of looking at the gifts of God. To be poor is to rejoice in the gifts of God, it is to realise that all is gift, it is to be free of a covetous attitude to those gifts. The poor in spirit are people of joy; they are not possessive. They are aware that when God grants his gifts it is not to make them independent of him but to bring them closer to him in gratitude for his generosity.

Generosity is not envious; it rejoices in what others have been given. Unlike envy, it feels no need to compare gifts. It has the right attitude to the gifts of God and, like other virtues, it brings its own reward.
