Temperance Sunday

The example of Matt Talbot

In Ireland as in so many other countries we have always had a very difficult relationship with alcohol. Excessive drinking is tolerated and accepted regardless of its damaging and often catastrophic effects. Added to the problem of alcohol misuse is the widespread and relatively cheap availability of drugs such as cannabis and cocaine.

Temperance Sunday, this weekend, is a day of prayer for those who struggle with addiction of all kinds.

We are fortunate here in Ireland to have Venerable Matt Talbot to draw on as an example of how prayer and abstinence can help overcome substance addiction.

Matt Talbot was born in 1856 into a poor working class family in Dublin, Matt was the second of twelve children. He left school early to go working for a wine merchant and then, later, to work on the Dublin docks. In both locations, Matt has access to alcoholic drink, and, by his early teens, he had become alcoholic. For more than ten years, he was a severe addict.

At the age of twenty-eight Matt was at his lowest point and, in a state of destitution and despair, he decided to give up alcohol. The only way he could do it was to rely on prayer and abstinence. Once he embraced his faith in God, Matt never drank alcohol again. There is little doubt that Matt overcame his addiction through the will power, determination and courage that his spiritual practice brought him.

The example of Matt Talbot along with annual moments such as Temperance Sunday, and the Lenten season that begins in a few days on Ash Wednesday, remind us that it is only from within – from the Spirit – that personal and communal restoration and renewal can be attained and maintained.
